The result can be a mesmerizing 15-minute-long loop. And, the best part? Coub creates music with its loops, so the same song can be used as music for your whole video. Coub is just one of several online video makers that are just plain fun. Here are some more, all with different features that make them stand out. Let's be honest. A lot of us have a YouTube account that we never visit. YouTube, it's a nice platform, but it's also a big time sink. What if your only idea for online video marketing is to upload videos of cats eating hairballs? Well, Vizzyball is probably the first video platform you should think about trying out. It's a more geeky, artistic, and interesting way to make YouTube videos. Vizzyball is a platform that lets you upload your videos (with Soundcloud music, of course), then edit them into short, and long videos. Also, you can make videos with subtitles. You can upload in just about any format, then cut and edit them to whatever you want. Check out the video above to see Vizzyball in action. It's not really a full "how-to" video, but the details are pretty easy to get. If you have your own domain name, but don't have a website with a blog, then there's no reason to start. Simply register a blog on Tumblr and add a link to your domain. From there, you can use WordPress to make your blog. Tumblr is one of the most popular microblogging platforms. The idea is simple. Users can create a post that is displayed to all of the site's followers. Tumblr was made by David Karp, the co-founder of Tumblr, who is also the president of the site. He worked on the site in his spare time, before it went public. Karp's idea was to make a platform that was fun and easy to use. Tumblr allows you to post new entries by just typing in the entries on the website. Ezvid is a YouTube clone, and we all know that YouTube is by far the most popular video website on the Internet. It's free to create videos on Ezvid, but you will need to pay to upload your videos to their own servers. If you have a real brand you want to promote, Ezvid is probably your best choice for marketing videos. You can use any of 82157476af
